Asian and Near Eastern Languages and Literatures The Undergraduate Minor in Persian Language and Literature

About the Persian Program at Washington University:

The Persian program enables undergraduate minors to attain an intermediate level of proficiency in Persian in speaking, listening, reading, and writing, a solid foundation in cultural and literary knowledge about Iran and the Middle East, and the cultural skills needed to communicate effectively in a Persian environment.

The Minor:

The minor in Persian Language and Literature requires the completion of 18 credits, no more than 12 of which may be in language. Minimum requirements for the minor include two years of Persian language and the successful completion of at least two literature/culture courses. Please note that students must earn a minimum of B- in language courses in order to proceed to the next level. Students who place out of language courses because of previous language training, or because they are native speakers of the language, must complete 15 units with literature and culture courses as approved by their minor advisor.

Transfer Credit: Normally no more than 3 units of credit earned at an institution other than Washington University may be applied to the minor.

Grade options: The Pass/Fail grade option is not allowed for any minor courses.

Double Majors: Please note that no more than 3 units of the required 18 units for the minor may be courses that are also used to satisfy the requirements of a major.
